

Health Care Reporter

Rhode Island Public Radio seeks a knowledgeable journalist, who wants help people make better informed decisions, as a Health Care Reporter. The successful candidate must be capable of explaining scientific and policy issues in an engaging manner that shows their direct impact on quality of life. The Health Care Reporter is expected to develop sources and story ideas primarily about efforts to improve and protect people's health. The Health Care reporter also is expected to information and suggestions to other members of the news department and to report on assigned topics. This is a grant funded position subject renewal after one year. Send resume and work samples to:

Mark Degon, News Director

Rhode Island Public Radio

1 Union Station

Providence, RI 02903